Taste a Sip of the Fragrance of Taiwan's Tea from National Archives

The only professional organization for tea industry counseling in Taiwan - Tea research and Extension Station (COA), was founded nine years before the Republic of China (1903). Tea research and Extension Station found out the most suitable areas for growing black tea in Taiwan, and developed tea plantation and cultivation management, prevention of pests and diseases, and even leaves picking standards (Figure 1) as well as how to renew aging tea gardens, etc.

Folder Title: Tea industry promotion methods and technical improvement in 1960.

ID Number: A345410000G/0049/0201/01

Transferring agency: Tea research and Extension Station, COA

Depository: National Archives Administration, NDC

As was seen from the report of the "Review Meeting on the Current Situation and Future Business Prospects of Taiwan's Black Tea Industry" held on August 21, 1980, Taiwan's black tea export lacked competitiveness and was unprofitable in international tea market at that time, due to the high production costs and low sale price and a low global market share of less than 0.1%. The meeting concluded that the tea industry should adopt a more conservative approach to limit and focus on domestic market and should not encourage widely increase in plantation area.

However, Tea research and Extension Station still has great confidence in the development and prospect of Taiwan's black tea industry. Because of its high quality, it can adopt direct sales in future and supply high-quality products, such as small packages, small tea bags, black tea biscuits, etc., in the hope of saving Taiwan's black tea industry, and increasing the income of tea farmers.
